Please explain how these funds will be used to provide a public benefit:

As one of the country's fastest growing cities, Greenville's demographics are changing as more and more people in their 20s, 30s, and 40s move here every year. In just the last ten years, Greenville's population has grown 16% and draws in millions of visitors annually. The Peace Center aims to diversify its audience base and remain competitive with arts and culture venues across the nation. To do so, it will meet two important needs in the local arts and entertainment community: 1) fun, casual music and event venues that attract diverse audiences and music acts to Greenville and, 2) more resources for artist development and education.

A flat-floor club experience is extremely different from that of a proscenium theatre with continental seating. In fact, most of the musicians audiences want to see in a club do not accept gigs in venues like the Peace Concert Hall. Time and again, the Peace Center has heard from patrons who want to experience music while dancing in a fun, "cool" environment. With the addition of the Coach Factory, a 1,150-capacity music and event venue, and The Mockingbird, a 250-capcity listening room and lounge, we will meet this public need. In addition, the arts and music community in Greenville has the potential to be a competitive market for artist development and discovery. With few resources available to local artists, many relocate to Atlanta, Nashville, or another "music/arts town." The Peace Center will address this need by creating a dedicated arts education center for expanded education and professional development programs that will fill gaps in our community.
