The Cecil Williams South Carolina Civil Rights Museum is the first and only civil rights museum in the state of South Carolina. Visitors to the museum will gain a better understanding of the role of South Carolina during the Civil Rights era. Using the extensive collection for presentations in schools will enhance the knowledge of the students in South Carolina about the history of the civil rights in South Carolina. Moving into phase two of the 36 previous months of operation, the museum will now expand its exhibits and displays to attract additional regional and statewide visitors along Interstate 26 to exit into Orangeburg at exits, 145, 149, and 154. Print and digital ads will promote the museum and its exclusive historically significant artifacts, documents, and photographs. In addition to the museum's impressive collection of events throughout South Carolina, special emphasis is given to the Orangeburg Massacre, and the Clarendon County Briggs v. Elliott petitioners; already the largest exhibits anywhere have been curated at the museum. Part-time director and manager will enable museum to achieve flexible working hours to attract visitors without appointments. A qualified historian/consultant will enable the museum to continue to interpret, and curate artifacts and documents.
